PERSONAL STATEMENT

One of my earliest childhood memories is being at the ice rink watching Rachael, my older sister, play ice hockey. Unfortunately, I also remember that Rachael was injured several times. My sister later attended a boarding school in New York where she played on an all girls ice hockey team. Due to lack of physical therapy facilities in that rural community, she sought temporary pain-relief by taking prescription medicine. Rachael unintentionally became dependent on painkillers to maintain her performance on the ice. Within a few months, pain medication became a priority to her. After high school, she played college ice hockey but returned home after she started using other harmful drugs. Although Rachael was able to get assistance and is doing better, her improper use of medicine and drugs made a lasting impression on me.

Overall, my sister's addiction impacted my ability to accept others despite their past. I also wouldn't be as strong individually without having experienced the hardship of having a sister who went through so much turmoil.

Even though there was a nine-year age difference between us, Rachael's reputation followed me throughout my childhood. I attended a private school, and the stigma of having a sister who abused drugs led to difficulties with my acceptance from members of my peer groups and their parents. I was initially excluded from play dates and eventually from social events because others assumed I might be a negative influence. For several years, I had difficulty acknowledging my sister because I was too young to understand why she chose drugs over a healthy relationship with our family. Once I realized her choices were not a reflection of her lack of respect or care for our family, the anger, isolation, and hurt I once struggled with slowly transformed into strength. I then became better able to accept the things I cannot change.

As I have become an adult, I realize that your experiences whether good or bad prepare you for the difficulties and challenges you will face in the future. My life experiences have guided me toward my passion to help others. I now feel a special connection with those who suffer from injuries or disabilities and can benefit through the use of a drug free alternative like physical therapy to alleviate their pain.

I have learned to accept my sister more as a person and less for her past choices. Understanding this concept has influenced my attitudes and perceptions in several ways. For example, I approach situations and individuals with more humility and patience because of the unfair judgment I have experienced. Every patient is different and some may feel vulnerable or embarrassed during the physical therapy process. For this reason, my past experiences will enable me to be less judgmental about patient's attitude toward the situation that requires therapy. As a caregiver, it's necessary to see the patient as a person first, and not just focus on his or her injury or disability.

During the past two years while working at a physical therapy clinic, I have observed the empathy a skilled therapist shows each patient. The therapists often develop meaningful friendships with patients that help them to better design a specific treatment plan. I believe my capacity for feeling compassion towards others will enhance my ability to provide and manage a non-addictive treatment plan for both pediatric and adult patients to aid in their recovery while also enhancing their quality of life.

Physical therapy can be mentally and physically challenging. By acknowledging a patient's emotional state there is an improved opportunity for success. Some patients may experience frustration or feel defeated at times, so it is vital as their physical therapist to highlight the small improvements achieved through physical therapy. Watching my sister struggle with addiction, I eventually realized that even small victories are important steps toward recovery. Understanding that it takes time, dedication, and perseverance to help someone heal is an important trait. I will incorporate this insight into my practice as a physical therapist.

The idea of a drug-free alternative that could help people to recover from injuries or debilitating illnesses both appeals and motivates me. At first, my sister situation caused me only pain. Now I understand that I would not be as resilient or as accepting of others without those experiences. The PT program that accepts me will not regret that decision.

Madison Esenwein

My involvement in sports at an early age marked the beginning of my passion to become a physical therapist. By ninth grade, I was spending significant time in the training room due to various injuries. This was my first interaction with athletic trainers. Throughout high school I spent hours rehabbing leg injuries and was immediately intrigued by physical therapy. When it was time to start college, I decided to major in kinesiology.

My initial interest in a possible career in physical therapy was sparked from sports injuries. However, it was during my time spent volunteering at the Special Olympics I was exposed to the children's excitement of participating in events that I became inspired. I am now primarily interested in assisting children. My professional goal is to work in a setting where I can enhance the lives of children with disabilities by developing exercises and therapies that are uniquely designed for each child. I am also eager to experience and acquire knowledge in every aspect that physical therapy has to offer.

Working as a camp counselor for two summers also influenced my aspiration to work with children. To be successful as both a camp counselor and as a physical therapist, a person must project a positive and energetic attitude in order to motivate the individuals and to serve as a role model. I have also learned the importance of maintaining a selfless mentality. Through these experiences, I discovered a natural joy and talent for working with children.

To further understand the necessities to become a pediatric physical therapist, I am volunteering at McMains Children Developmental Center in Baton Rouge, LA. Each treatment session observed includes an exposure to new activities that are both therapeutic and impactful to the child. Although this branch of physical therapy is demanding and requires an abundance of patience, the smiles and laughter on the patients' faces make this occupation choice rewarding.

I am currently working as a physical therapy technician at Peak Performance. I have gained an abundance of experience with motivating patients and attending to their needs when necessary. I've learned that every patient is unique and recovers at different speeds, so it is important to acknowledge minor improvements during their physical therapy sessions.

Through my job, I have worked with a patient who suffered from a left-sided stroke. At first, he was confined to a wheelchair but through his dedication and consistent physical therapy sessions he has dramatically expanded his range of motion. He is now able to walk with the assistance of a cane. Being a part of this patient's treatment and witnessing his progress reinforced my career choice as a physical therapist.

Both of my supervising physical therapists attended St. Augustine in Florida and highly of that program. I admire them both individually and professionally. Also one of my good friends from LSU is currently attending the University of St. Augustine for Health Sciences in Austin. During our several conversations she has expressed that although the curriculum is challenging, she finds the hard work to be rewarding. I have spent a significant amount of time in Austin and the surrounding area where I attended summer camp for eight years.

I believe the Doctorate of Physical Therapy Residential Program will provide an in depth education to become an effective and hands-on physical therapist. I have high expectations that the innovative equipment and three clinical internships will build my confidence through experience with the most cutting-edge techniques, all while practicing my skills in a clinical setting. In addition to hands-on experience and groundbreaking equipment, I appreciate that the professors are still practicing therapists to ensure the material taught is based on the latest research and techniques used today.

Physical therapy is more than just a future career to me. I view this profession as both a way to earn a living and the ability to do something that will produce immediate and long-term positive results in the lives of others. Every job has its challenges, however, in my mind the personal rewards of helping people through physical therapy will outweigh the difficulties of this profession. Through continued education and training, I have no doubt that I will overcome all obstacles and will one day become an excellent physical therapist.

To Whom It May Concern:

This letter supports Madison Esenwein's application to your PT program and I am glad to assist her in this process.

Most students who request reference letters from me have been through at least two of my classes. Madison's situation is a little different, for she has been in only one of my classes to date, and that was completed the summer 2017. Madison was one of 42 students enrolled in our cadaver dissection classes (KIN 4519). This class is highly sought by students in Kinesiology and from departments across the campus. Enrollment is very selective and reserved for the best. Madison clearly qualified (her overall GPA is near 3.7) and she did very well in the class. Her dissections were clean, neat, and she revealed all the required structures. Her dissection work was consistently among the best in the two classes.

I had not met Madison prior that summer's class. However, 4519 is a class in which instructors and students can interact quite a lot and I found Madison to be very personable and pleasant. She was easy to work with, took constructive criticism very well, and was eager to learn all she could. Therefore, based on my experience with Madison, I believe she is an excellent candidate for your PT program and I am pleased to endorse her application.

Sincerely,

Dennis Landin, EdD

RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING ADMISSION

I recommend this applicant

Madison has been an employee of Peak Performance Physical Therapy since 2017. She had worked as a volunteer for 1 semester prior to her employment, then employed as a technician to the present date due to her consistency with attendance weekly and continued interest in the field. Madison demonstrates the qualities needed to be a PT. She is adequate with communication, whether it be with patients or therapists in our clinic. She has been able to observe both PT and OT treatment on a daily basis, taking an active interest in both. She exhibits most attributes that will be required in the PT graduate program. She portrays great work ethic while present in the clinic and determination with every task that is asked of her to perform. I recommend this candidate for admission into your program, however with the reservation that she was inconsistent with attending her assigned work shifts, as at times she would provide late notice when she could not find coverage for those shifts.

RECOMMENDATION CONCERNING ADMISSION

Maddie has worked for me for over a year as a tech. She is a fast learner and she has done a good job. She works really well one on one with the patients. She shows interest in the field of PT and she asks questions when she doesn't know something about an exercise or technique to further her knowledge in this field. She shows initiative and communicates well with the patients and staff. Overall she does a good job and will do well in PT school.
